

INTERNAL DELIVERY DECK

SteadyUs Coach Delivery Guide

A practical presentation for running the Couples Budget Reset with calm structure, clear boundaries, and usable follow-through.

Designed to support live facilitation across Session 1, the between-session step, and Session 2 without drifting into pressure-heavy coaching or regulated financial advice.

USE THIS FOR

Internal rhythm,
prompts, and delivery
consistency

This deck turns the written playbook into a presentation you can review before calls, use in training, or hand to another coach supporting the same offer.

Keep the tone steady, practical, and non-judgemental. The aim is not to impress with complexity. The aim is to help couples leave clearer than they arrived.

Lead with calm, clarity, and shared ownership

The offer works best when the coach helps the couple see the same picture at the same time, then narrows the work into a few realistic next steps. The structure should feel steady rather than corrective.

Calm over pressure

Lower judgement, slow the pace, and keep the conversation usable. If the session feels intense, overloaded, or corrective, the couple is less likely to speak honestly.

Clarity over complexity

The goal is not technical analysis. The goal is a clearer shared view of income, spending pressure, friction loops, and what needs attention first.

Shared ownership and practical movement

Both partners should leave knowing what is happening next. Progress is measured in usable decisions, not in producing a perfect financial system in one go.

Scope boundary stays explicit

This package covers budgeting support and financial organisation only. It is not regulated advice on investments, pensions, tax, mortgage products, or legal matters. It is also not therapy, crisis support, debt counselling, or dispute mediation. When specialist issues arise, acknowledge them clearly and redirect back to the next practical decision that still sits inside the coaching remit.

BEFORE SESSION 1

Reduce friction before the first call

The pre-session job is not to collect perfect information. It is to help the couple arrive feeling safe enough to be honest and clear enough to know what the first conversation is for.

A good start lowers emotional load, keeps preparation light, and frames the session as shared work rather than one partner being assessed.

01

Lower emotional pressure

Use simple reassurance early. Make it explicit that the first session is about clarity, not judgement, and that they do not need perfect behaviour or perfect records to begin.

02

Set expectations clearly

Frame Session 1 as a visibility session. The aim is to understand the current picture and surface the main pressure points, not to solve every financial issue immediately.

03

Reduce preparation burden

Ask only for light preparation or a short intake response. Avoid turning the lead-in into a demanding admin exercise that makes the couple feel behind before they start.

04

Encourage joint attendance

Position the session as something both partners benefit from hearing together. This helps create shared context from the outset and reduces one-sided retelling later.

Session 1 makes the picture visible

The first session should slow the conversation down, bring the real money picture into view, and help both partners name the patterns that keep creating drag. Stay curious, steady, and selective rather than trying to fix everything at once.

STAGE 01

Open the conversation

Set a calm tone, reinforce that the goal is clarity rather than blame, and make it easier for both partners to contribute without defensiveness.

Map the current picture

Bring income, spending, savings, obligations, and immediate pressures into one shared view so the couple can describe reality in simple terms.

STAGE 03

Surface pressure points

Notice where money feels heavy, avoided, emotionally loaded, or repeatedly postponed so hidden stress becomes discussable.

STAGE 04

Identify friction patterns

Highlight the recurring loops such as confusion, overload, uneven responsibility, or repeated disagreements without turning the conversation into fault-finding.

STAGE 05

Close with focus

Summarise the few issues that matter most and frame what Session 2 needs to solve next so the couple leaves with direction, not overwhelm.

Desired outcome

By the end of Session 1, the couple should have a shared starting point: a clearer sense of what is really going on, what is causing friction, and which topics deserve focused attention next.

Internal prompts that keep the session grounded

CLARIFY

“If we slowed everything down for a moment, what feels most financially unclear right now?”

REDUCE BLAME

“What feels hard about the system or situation, rather than about either of you as a person?”

PREPARE SESSION 2

“If next session could make one part of this feel more manageable, what would matter most?”

Keep momentum light, then narrow to decisions

Keep issues visible without creating homework overload; use the gap to keep momentum and focus.

Between-session approach

Preserve clarity and reduce drift so the couple keeps momentum, not guilt.

Keep prompts simple

Ask one or two light questions that reflect the main issues from Session 1.

Prepare for choices

Notice what feels urgent or already agreed so the next session can focus.

Prevent quiet drift

Keep contact brief and specific so Session 2 starts focused.

Session 2 decision flow

STEP 1

Reconnect to Session 1

Restate the main pressures and confirm what still matters most.

STEP 3

Turn intentions into routines

Translate priorities into simple habits and decisions for ordinary weeks.

STEP 2

Agree realistic priorities

Narrow attention to the few issues to tackle first.

STEP 4

Define ownership clearly

Make next steps explicit: who does what and what can wait.

Document clearly and close with usable next steps

Good documentation should support clarity, continuity, and calm follow-through. Keep it focused and practical.

Use the notes template to capture what actually matters

WHAT TO CAPTURE

Record the couple's tone, main pressure points, recurring friction, and the few issues that matter next.

HOW TO WRITE IT

Summarise the pattern plainly; focus on clarity, uneven load, avoidance, decisions, and ownership.

WHAT TO AVOID

Avoid data dumps, moral verdicts, or pseudo-advice. Keep notes to the essentials.

Run a quick delivery quality check after each session

TONE CHECK

Was the conversation calm, practical, and balanced for both partners?

SCOPE CHECK

Did the session stay within budgeting and organisation, not specialist advice?

OUTCOME CHECK

Did they leave clearer with a specific next step to act on?

Written follow-up should stay concise and practical

Reinforce the main priorities and agreed next steps in plain language. Keep it short and actionable; add a brief scope reminder if needed.
